

Calf campaign — three directions

TISSUE

WHERE WE START

Success is measured in letters. Not reach, not views.

The only metric that really mattered on the call: thousands of letters to MPs. This is the third round of the campaign — after 2022 and 2024 — so whatever we create needs to feel genuinely different from what has come before.

The production setup is simple: one shooting day with Push Pull in Sofia, with everyone appearing as themselves. And one reality shapes all three directions: since October 2025, major platforms no longer sell political and social-issue advertising in the EU. So the ideas are designed to travel organically first — through the participants' own channels — with paid media playing a supporting role.

HOW TO READ THIS

Three routes. Not three finished films.

These are tissue ideas — directions, not final films. Everything here is meant to be argued with, cut down and built up with you.

Each one carries a different energy and opens the problem from a different angle. All three are built the same way: to travel, to feel like nobody else's, to break into many formats, and to end in signatures.

ONE MORE LETTER

DIRECTION 01 — THE ONE WHERE THE FILM IS THE ASK

01

THE IDEA

A person.
A chair.
A letter.

The film and the ask are the same gesture. We don't want familiar faces telling people what to do. We want them to do it first. Each person writes their own open letter to Parliament — in their own words, for their own reasons. They read it to camera, sign it and send it. Then they look up: I wrote mine. Now write yours.

TEN LETTERS. THEN YOURS.

MOODBOARD

DIRECTION
01

The treatment

How the film runs — the execution, not the idea.

A chair against a plain wall. Someone sits down, unfolds a handwritten letter and reads: “I am writing to you for the third time. In 2022. In 2024. Today.” Cut — the same chair, the same frame, only the room behind it has changed. Then it changes again. Ten people, one chair, one letter each, in their own words.

They read from the page and lift their eyes into the lens mid-sentence. “I am writing about eight weeks. About a metre and a half of the world.” Another: “The crate was built to protect them. I moved mine into groups, and I have fewer sick calves, not more.” Then the cuts shorten to hands, and the letters leave the paper — a laptop, a phone, a screen by a window. One gesture, and they are sent.

The same frame, the same light, nobody on the chair. On the seat, a blank sheet and a pen. A long silence. Then one voice: “Ten letters aren’t enough. We need one more. Yours.”

„Аз писах. Сега пиши ти.“

THE HERO FILM

MOODBOARD

01 THE OPENING · STRAIGHT INTO THE LETTERS

No introduction, no campaign language. We open on the first voices already addressing Parliament — personal, direct, immediately clear that these are their own words. The first letter is on paper.

MOODBOARD

02 THE LETTERS · PERSONAL

Why it matters to me. Different voices, different reasons, each written on whatever is at hand — paper, laptop, phone. One or two letters carry the factual layer — individual crates were introduced as a way to protect calves. Today, we know more. Together, the individual letters begin to form one collective argument.

MOODBOARD

03 THE SENDING · THE RHYTHM BUILDS

The letters move from words into action. Cuts shorten to gestures: a final line, a signature, hands on a keyboard, a thumb on a phone, click, sent. Keys, taps and paper build the rhythm as one letter becomes many.

MOODBOARD

04 THE EMPTY CHAIR · EVERYTHING STOPS

Then, for the first time, nothing happens. Same frame, nobody in it. A blank sheet and a pen waiting for the next letter. We hold it. No typing. No click. No movement. Real silence.

MOODBOARD

05 THE ASK

Their letters are sent. Now it's your turn. → priziv.bg

06 THE CUT

A 2–3 min hero film gives the letters — and the people behind them — room to breathe. A 60 s cut takes the sharpest lines into social distribution.

LETTERS

Ten letters.
None of them should sound alike.

DIFFERENT PEOPLE. DIFFERENT REASONS.
DIFFERENT VOICES.

Blunt

Direct, authoritative, stripped back. It works well on a returning face.

Poetic

A letter with its own rhythm and its own language.

Personal

People with a genuine connection to animals. Emotional, specific and rooted in their own experience.

Factual

A credible voice from inside the system — somebody who has moved to group housing and can carry the factual counter-argument.

Minimal

For people who work through simplicity rather than performance.

THE VOICES WE'D LOOK FOR

People from culture, science, philosophy and public life — voices with credibility beyond celebrity.

And, if possible, a farmer or vet who has made the change. The answer to the idea that animal welfare campaigns demonise farmers lands best coming from someone who farms.

WHY IT'S
STRONGThe film and the ask are the same gesture.The idea

The film performs the exact action we want back: familiar faces act first, then ask others to follow.

The faces

Nobody plays a part. Their reasons, their words, their letters — written on whatever is at hand, paper or screen, with the first and the last one on paper.

The image

The empty chair becomes the campaign's visual signature — a place waiting for the next person.

The reach

A chair and a letter travel. The same set-up works in a studio, a kitchen, a farmyard — so the film can open and close in the studio and visit the faces in between. How far it travels is a directing and budget decision.

ONE SHOOT. A CAMPAIGN'S WORTH OF CONTENT.

One film per face · 60 s social cut · 2–3 min hero · vertical assets · public letters as follow-up content.

The empty chair remains a repeatable asset — ready for the next person, and the next wave.

The letters live on the site as inspiration, not copy-paste templates. The best public letters become new campaign content — so the campaign keeps growing after the hero film is out.

„Аз писах. Сега пиши ти.“

WE USED TO BELIEVE

DIRECTION 02 — THE ONE THAT REFRAMES THE ARGUMENT

THE IDEAOne room.
One wall.

One room, one wall — and a series of things we once believed, starting with the absurd and gradually becoming harder to laugh at. Each person is handed one real artefact from the past — proof of something once believed to be right, safe or healthy. They look at it, react, and pin it to the wall. Together, they build an archive of beliefs we've left behind. And one thought holds it all together: None of these people were evil. They acted on what they knew at the time.

MOODBOARD

EVERYTHING WE USED TO BELIEVE.

MOODBOARD

DIRECTION
02

The treatment

How the film runs — the execution, not the idea.

Black. Then a hand, a pin, a page going onto a wall. That gesture is the whole film: look, react, pin it up. The first is a doctor recommending a cigarette. “They put a doctor in it. So it would look safe.” The next sells bottled water as a cure, and the room laughs.

The wall fills. The laughing stops. A document on experiments done without anaesthesia — the first animal to go up. Then a page of medical consensus, read aloud: “...that a newborn does not truly feel pain.” Nobody is smiling now. “None of those people were evil. They believed what they knew.”

The last is a photograph taken this year: a calf in a crate. Someone looks at it, looks at the wall of everything we have left behind, and pins it among them. The camera moves across the wall, past the years in the corners, and stops on the last: 2026.

WE USED TO BELIEVE A LOT OF THINGS.
SOME OF THEM WE STILL DO.

We know better now. Help us change it.

THE HERO FILM

MOODBOARD

01 THE GESTURE

A hand, a pin, an artefact. The same simple gesture repeats throughout the film: look, react, pin it to the wall.

MOODBOARD

02 THE OPENING

Things once believed to be safe, healthy or right. At first, some feel almost absurd. A smile, a raised eyebrow. Onto the wall they go.

MOODBOARD

03 THE TURN

The beliefs become harder to laugh at. Practices once defended by the best knowledge available at the time. The first animal appears on the wall. Nobody is smiling now.

MOODBOARD

04 THE LAST ONE

This time, it isn't an artefact from the past. It's a photograph of a calf in an individual crate — pinned among the things we have already left behind.

05 THE DATE

The earlier artefacts carry years from the past. This one carries 2026. The date makes the point: this one isn't history.

06 THE CARD

WE USED TO BELIEVE A LOT OF THINGS. SOME OF THEM WE STILL DO. → prziv.bg

WHY IT'S STRONG

The argument is made by the objects.

The idea

It challenges “the crate protects” without arguing with anyone. The case is made by the objects themselves — and by the order in which we see them.

The faces

Nobody needs to perform. Look at something, react honestly, pin it to the wall. The format works with almost anyone.

The image

One wall slowly filling up. One gesture repeated. And one final photograph dated 2026. Visually, it takes us somewhere completely different from 2022 and 2024.

The reach

One person, one old belief, one honest reaction. Each becomes a short social film, while the wall can keep growing online.

The shoot

One room, one setup, one wall. Simple, modular, and flexible enough to survive last-minute changes in the cast.

WHAT WE'D NEED FROM YOU

One or two Bulgarian artefacts. Without them, the wall risks feeling like an imported list of Western examples. Your archives and local knowledge can make the idea feel genuinely Bulgarian.

The artefacts need to be researched and cleared before the shoot, so this one wants the earliest start.

THE SAFEST PLACE

DIRECTION 03 — THE ONE NOBODY SEES COMING

03

THE IDEAA keynote.
For a crate.

This is the one that plays it completely straight. A hall, a launch, applause — and one falling sheet that takes all of it away.

The crate has been sold as protection since 1975, so let's give it a proper launch. The keynote replaces the showroom, it isn't layered on it. Presenters handing over is keynote grammar, not a workaround, and the B-roll is a product film in macro, at a scale where nobody can tell what it is.

MOODBOARD

ONE PRODUCT. ONE SHEET.

MOODBOARD

DIRECTION
03

The treatment

How the film runs — the execution, not the idea.

A full hall, already lit. On the stage, under a sheet, stands the thing everyone came to see. A presenter walks into the light, the room applauds, and the launch begins. “Its own space. One occupant. Nothing shared.” Behind, macro footage at a scale that gives nothing away.

The presenters hand over and the pace picks up. A beat runs under the cuts. A dimension draws itself like a technical drawing. A vent. A hinge. Feature after feature, real energy in the seats — and every time the film returns to the stage, the covered shape is still there, lit and patient, with nowhere for the energy to land.

Then a sentence stops halfway. “The first eight weeks. Then it’s ready for—” The sheet comes down on the unfinished word, and the hall behind it is empty. Empty seats, no applause. White light, the product in the middle, and inside the product, a calf. The music stops.

THE HERO FILM

01 THE LAUNCH

A full hall, already lit. On the stage, under a sheet, stands the thing everyone came to see. A presenter walks into the light and the room applauds.

05 THE COVERED SHAPE

Every time the film returns to the stage, the covered shape is still there, lit and patient — with nowhere for the energy to land.

02 THE FIRST FEATURE

"Its own space. One occupant. Nothing shared." Then macro, backlit, at a scale that gives nothing away. Card: SINGLE OCCUPANCY.

06 THE UNFINISHED WORD

A sentence stops halfway. "The first eight weeks. Then it's ready for—" Card: 8 WEEKS.

03 THE SPECS

The presenters hand over and the pace picks up. A dimension draws itself like a technical drawing. A vent. A hinge. Feature after feature.

07 THE REVEAL

The sheet comes down on the unfinished word — and the hall behind it is empty. Empty seats, no applause, the music gone.

04 THE RHYTHM

A beat runs under the cuts and the room goes with it. Real energy in the seats — this is the direction that carries music.

08 THE LAST FRAME

White light, the product in the middle, and inside the product, a calf. Then one card, one date.

EIGHT FEATURES, EIGHT FACES

#	FEATURE	KEYNOTE LINE	REGISTER
01	Space	"Its own space. One occupant. Nothing shared."	Opens flat, with authority
02	Climate	"Its own microclimate. Fresh air from every side."	A technical claim, said as fact
03	Nutrition	"An exact dose. You know how much it drank and when."	Precise, almost proud
04	Hygiene	"Zero contact. An illness it has nobody to share with."	From another wall, in daylight
05	Supervision	"You can see it. At any time."	From another wall, in daylight
06	Quiet	"Nobody to bother it. Nobody to push it around."	Dry, no winking
07	Contact	"Nobody to touch it."	Where it starts to catch
08	First eight weeks	"The first eight weeks. Then it's ready for—"	The one that never finishes

THE ORDER IS THE ARGUMENT

Technical → personal → unbearable.
Nobody has to act; the flatter it is read, the better it works.

HOW THEY ARE SPREAD

Returning faces from 2024 open and sit in the middle — the same people a third time, completely differently. Anyone joining remotely sits where attention is loosest. Nobody remote carries the turn or the ending.

WHAT WE NEED FROM YOU

Every line has to be a verbatim quote of the argument the other side uses, translated into product language — not our parody. We'd want the wording word for word.

SHOT LIST — AND WHAT THE VIEWER MUST NOT RECOGNISE

M1 Surface	that it's plastic for an animal
M2 Vent slot	the scale — no reference in frame
M3 Hinge, 90°	that it locks from the outside
M4 Teat, one drop	that it isn't a kitchen detail
M5 Straw falling	that it's bedding, not packaging
M6 Corner joint	— pure product shot, turntable

M7 Floor, drain	what the drain is for
M8 The sheet	the shape underneath
M9 Hand on sheet	— the only human element
M10 Edge, rim light	the size
M11 Empty space	that anything is there
M12 Inside	— the only shot allowed after the turn

THE
TURNThe sheet comes down mid-sentence.HOW THE REVEAL IS SHOT

The reveal is one movement and is never cut. The sheet comes down on the unfinished word, and the hall behind it is empty. Inside the product there is a calf.

Then real silence, held past comfortable. Empty seats, no applause, the music gone — and nobody in the room admits when it left.

Then one card, one date: SOLD AS PROTECTION SINCE 1975. No institution, no attribution, no logo.

THE LAST WORD, IN CIVILIAN CLOTHES

“Calves in groups of ten, milk from a teat, air, space. And fewer illnesses, not more. The crate was a good idea when the alternative was an overcrowded barn.”

SOMEBODY WHO FARMS, AND WHO
MOVED TO GROUPS

TWO ENDINGS, ONE
SHOOTING DAY

10a organic. Straight on, no cut. “We know this now. The people who can change it sit in Parliament. I’ve written to them.” → priziv.bg — the line that carries the letters underneath C1.

10b paid. Same person, same day, different take. “Read the full product description.” → microsite. No Parliament, no law, no petition anywhere in the running time.

THE HARD CONSTRAINT

No asset — social or paid — ends before the reveal.

The shortest permitted unit is feature + macro + the reveal. In the edit brief as a rule, not a suggestion.

Otherwise we have made an ad for the crate.

WHY IT'S STRONG

Their argument, read out word for word.

The idea

It quotes the other side’s own argument, word for word, and lets it fail on its own. Nobody is attacked — the brochure is.

The faces

Nobody has to act, and the flatter it’s read the better it works. A satellite presenter is keynote grammar, so a remote face is a format, not a compromise.

The image

Nothing in this space looks like this. A full hall, a launch, macro product photography — then silence, empty seats and a calf in the frame.

The reach

Eight to ten feature spots that each stand alone, spec cards, a product sheet as a carousel. Every unit ends on the reveal.

WHERE THE JOKE IS AIMED

At the brochure, never at the farmer. Quote the argument as a period — “in 1975” — never as a speaker. No attribution, no institution, no logo.

The last third is plain and generous and leaves the other side a ramp: the crate was a good idea when the alternative was an overcrowded barn.

Anthropomorphism is ruled out by the register itself — a product has no gender, no feelings, no name. The only animal shot is M12, after the turn.

Played absolutely straight. No imitation of a specific brand, no black turtlenecks, no “one more thing”.

The whole idea stands on one prop — a real hutch, borrowed from a farm and confirmed by 16 September, not by the shooting day.

WHERE THEY ALL LEAD

THREE ROUTES — YOU PICK ON 9 SEPTEMBER

ONE MORE LETTER

The ask is the film. People write in their own words, sign, and send — and then turn the question to you.

WE USED TO BELIEVE

The argument is made by objects. One wall, one repeated gesture, and a date that says this one isn't history.

THE SAFEST PLACE

Their own words, played straight, until a sheet comes down mid-sentence and the hall behind it is empty.

WHAT ALL THREE END IN

Whichever route you pick, the film ends in the same place: a name on a letter to Parliament, at priziv.bg. Everything else — how it is shot, how it travels, how it breaks into formats — follows from the route.

Three routes.
One thing we want back: a signature.
